INVINCIBLE

WRITE US AT INVINCIBLE@SKYBOUND.COM

TO. BE. CONTINUED. Seriously. We got some good letters this month, and with limited space, I can't dwell on what a psycho Onann is, or what exactly is going to happen to dear, precious Terra... Wizard Magazine's prohibitive favorite for New Character of the Year 2016!

Oh, man! I hope we win! Fingers crossed! (This is Robert in italics, btw.)

Excuse me but WHAT was that ending? Marky? Really?

Anissa is trifling. To the extent that she NAMES the kid after Mark? Ooof.

Robert you've got to stop this, my heart can't take anymore. Every issue this arc has made me want to rip the pages apart as tears stream down my face. I can't stand to watch Oliver 'snaking' around knowing he's backstabbing everyone or to see Mark's heart crushed repeatedly and then you make Anissa appear from thin air WITH A CHILD. ROBERT PLEASE STOP THIS FOR THE GOOD OF THE FANS.

You better reserve a spot at your local hospital after the next issue.

Lots of love from
Kay
England

Ps. Cory your art is awesome!

Oh, is that how it is now? Robert's writing drives me crazy, but Cory's art is awesome! Where's the love, Kay? You're breaking my heart... but not as much as we'll be breaking your heart next issue.

And honestly, these scenes wouldn't be as affecting and upsetting if Cory wasn't handling them so well. He's really drawing a ton of emotion out of those lines on paper.

So, I just put down issue 129, and I'd like to say how engaging that shit was without action was awesome. I love character building, and we got a lot of it spread perfectly across these pages.

I wouldn't be writing in, however, if not for the first dude in the letters column. Everyone's entitled to an opinion, but I feel like Marcus misses the point. Artwork is subjective. It's a form of expression, a storytelling medium, and as long as it's done with passion, you can't really call it bad or good. I'll admit, I also prefer Ottley's artwork in this series by a fair margin. But Cory Walker is still very much a talented artist. I've been drawing my whole life (almost 30 years) and will likely never reach his level of technical skill. In addition to that, didn't he help create this series? Don't we owe many of our now iconic character designs to him? Whatever your opinion of an artist is, you MUST show respect where it is due. And Cory Walker certainly is due some respect.

Yes, Cory Walker is the co-creator of INVINCIBLE, and even when he wasn't drawing the series, has been involved behind the scenes with character designs, and he gives damn good color notes.

Lastly, Mark's got a son now that should be about Terra's age! This shit's gonna get reeeeeeal interesting, yo. Sheeit.

TL;DR - Don't be a dick, Marcus.

-Preston

We got a follow-up letter from Marcus, so let's hear it from him.

Oh! This should be good!

I just read #129 and had forgotten I'd even sent that letter months ago. Though I do still greatly prefer Ryan's art on Invincible, I'm growing to appreciate Cory's art on this arc. At the time when #127 came out I had just gone through a painful and heart-breaking divorce and was eagerly looking forward to Invincible as a return to something normal I loved, and in my disappointment I took out a lot of hurt and anger on Cory. As I think I said I've been a reader for a long time (since the first hardcover trade) and I have re-read the series many times (giving it glowing reviews to any other comic lover I meet), and it holds a special place in my heart. I'm normally a very positive and happy guy and am ashamed at what I wrote. Hope you accept my apology - you have a reader for life (though I still can't wait until #133).

Though I still prefer Preston's opinion to yours... we're cool.

Opinions, both positive and negative, are always welcome. Even if I read you the riot act in the letters column, we do still appreciate you sharing your thoughts with us. Sorry to hear about your recent troubles. I think Cory can relate, he got a mean fan letter a few months back.

We're back at it next month. Until then, little Terra is stuck in perpetual free-fall. Just... dangling.

-Sean Mackiewicz

Yes, next month--I think! Thanks for bearing with us schedule-wise. I know it's not an ideal situation, but we bit off a little more than we can chew with this arc in the effort of making the last 18 issues of this series as cool as they can be!

The good news is that Ryan Ottley is getting more time to get even further ahead of schedule, so it will be smooth sailing very soon! And Cory's last issue... is going to be GREAT!!

-Robert Kirkman

NEXT ISSUE

Thragg makes a move that will change everything. The cataclysmic events of this issue lead directly into the TWELVE-PART epic "END OF ALL THINGS".
